A Letter from Your Holy Family Priest | Marriage as a Sacramental Covenant in the book of Genesis

In the book of Genesis is found the basis of the covenant between man and woman and how God has created man and woman in a covenantal union to be complementary to one each other because marriage was in God’s plan from the beginning. His plan of salvation of humankind is revealed in the new covenant in Jesus Christ.

In this context, Cardinal Outlet affirms that God’s revelation regarding marriage has his core in two different accounts of creation: the priestly (Genesis 1:1-2: 4a, fifth century BC) and the Yahwist (Genesis 4:4b-25). He emphasizes the common element in both accounts as the unity of the couple (Man and Woman), which are found in two narratives: a) the formation of the woman by God from the man-body or flesh (Yahwist account -Gen 2:21-24). From this, Adam saw Eve (woman) as his own complement who was created in the same image and likeness as him. So, the spousal union is expressed with the affirmation: “they became one flesh” (Genesis 2:24). Therefore, in Genesis 1:26, it expresses the nuptials between Adam and Eve. In this context, in Genesis 1:27, the complementarity and identical dignity of a man and woman is found. Nevertheless, in Genesis 1:28, we find God’s blessing, which is a sign of his presence in them, and the gifts of a conjugal encounter between man and woman (Genesis 4:1). In this context, St. John Paul II refers to the book of Genesis as the origin of “Fundamental human community” (Genesis 2:24) and a procreative community of love (Genesis 1:28), which is an expression of the “Creator’s salvific initiative”. Thus, in the book of Genesis, God is the initiator of the covenantal complementary relationship between a man and a woman whom He blessed from the beginning and is fulfilled in Jesus Christ, in the new covenant.

-Rev. Pedro Ruiz
