A Letter from your Holy Family Priest | Celebrating Catholic Schools Week

For the past 50 years, Catholics from around the United States have celebrated Catholic Schools Week. This past week our community did the same, marking this annual event which reminds us of the invaluable contributions that Catholic schools make to the intellectual, spiritual, and moral development of our students.

Catholic Schools week does not simply take place during this week-long celebration; rather, it serves as a reminder to all that the Catholic Church has always had an enduring commitment to fostering a holistic approach to learning and that we celebrate the contributions of our Catholic schools each time we remember how our lives have been touched by Catholic education.

I have always felt very blessed that my parents were willing and able to make some significant sacrifices to send my brother and I to Catholic grade school. I was fortunate enough to attend a Catholic college and have my faith nurtured there as well. To this day, I am thankful to the teachers, administrators, and support staff who played a pivotal role in providing me with a nurturing environment where I felt supported, encouraged, and inspired to achieve my full potential.

The celebration of Catholic Schools Week takes nothing away from the great contributions that our public schools make to the formation and education of our young people. Both private and public education should be celebrated, because both have been positively impacted by Catholic education. In both public and private schools, we see how our Catholic Faith shapes the lives of students who seek out the Truth and desire to learn what it means to be holy, productive members of society.

As we draw this Catholic Schools Week to a close, let us remind ourselves of the lives of countless educators that have left us an enduring legacy of faith-based learning. Let us celebrate the unique and essential role that Catholic schools play in shaping future leaders, thinkers, and compassionate individuals who will give their lives in service to the Church today, tomorrow, and always. And finally, let us pray for the blessings of Almighty God to remain with all of our local Catholic schools.

-Very Rev. Ryan Pruess
